24. 다음 글의 요지로 가장 적절한 것은?

Common wisdom states, "If it tastes good, it's not good for you." It also says, "If you get to eat the foods you like, you're not dieting." There is no evidence to support these claims. In fact, many diets fail due to this attitude. When dieting, there is no reason that the foods have to taste bad. I knew a bodybuilder who used to mix tuna, water, and protein powder in a blender for lunch. His idea was that food didn't need to taste good; what really mattered was getting nutrients. That mentality may work for some. But if you tell the majority of people that their food must be dull or that they can't ever eat what they like, you are setting them up for failure. Flavor in the diet helps to ensure success as long as the flavor is not pushing you over your calorie budget.

Most universities have students fill out an evaluation of every course they take. The results are often made publicly available and can be a good guide to the best classes. In fact, a large number of studies have shown some of the benefits of these evaluations. In the first place, they are reliable; students tend to agree with each other on which classes are good and even ten years later still rate the same classes highly. They also appear to be correlated with performance; students perform better in classes they rate highly. In one study, two professors taught the same class and gave identical exams; students taught by the professor with higher evaluations performed better on the exam.

One spring morning I paused beside a park fountain to watch the spray change the sunlight into beautiful rainbows. A young mother, followed by a tiny blond girl, came hurrying along the path. When the child saw the fountain, she threw her arms wide. "Mommy, wait!" she cried. "See all the pretty colors!" The mother reached for her daughter's hand. "Come on," she urged. "We'll miss our bus!" Then seeing the joy on the small face, she said, "All right, there'll be another bus soon." As she knelt with her arms around the child, joy filled the mother's face too—that rare and special joy of sharing something lovely with someone we love. Since that day, I've found that the happiest children belong to families rich in rainbows shared.

If you don't take any risks, you don't get any sweetness out of life. And the truth of the matter is that the sweetness in life ③ comes with the risk. I've lived my life ④ taking risks and I wish I could tell you they were all successful, but they weren't. But you want to know something? When two monkeys are trapped together in a small cage, they try everything they can to (A) prevent/start a fight. Moving with caution and suppressing any behaviors that could trigger aggression are good short-term solutions to the problem. The monkeys sit in a corner and avoid any random movements; even a brief touch could be interpreted as the beginning of (B) generous/hostile action. Mutual eye contact is also dangerous because, in monkey language, staring is a threat. The monkeys look up in the air or at the ground, or stare at some imaginary point outside the cage. But as time passes, sitting still and pretending (C) authority/indifference are no longer sufficient strategies to keep the situation under control. To avoid aggression and to reduce stress, an act of communication is needed to make it clear to the other monkey that no harm is intended.

My hands were wet with sweat and I was shaking. Part of my mind was screaming out to me to turn back. I was standing on the bridge, preparing myself to jump off. There was an instructor on either side of my arms to keep me from falling off. The two men screamed, "FIVE, FOUR, THREE, TWO, ONE, GO!" Finally I jumped as far out as I could. My eyes closed and all I could hear was the wind flying past me. Then I felt the rope catch my ankles. My body jerked. Hanging upside down, I opened my eyes to see two hills reflected on the ocean. "I made it!" I thought to myself. I let out a satisfied laugh.

34. The most persuasive speakers, marketers, and leaders always frame their messages first in _____ to get the "buy in" of the unconscious mind. Only after the immediate concerns of the unconscious mind have been satisfied can the conscious mind begin to be convinced of, or interested in, anything. Most politicians say, "I will do such-and-such if elected." But we can't think about that type of an uncertain future; we can only process the "now." Similarly, marketers have found some phrases such as "get started today" and "immediate delivery" to be very powerful. Telling someone "It'll be ready in a month," or "It usually takes eight weeks for delivery," will make the sale much more difficult. [3점]

- ① a musical tone
- ② the present tense
- ③ the long-term perspective
- ④ a few indirect words
- ⑤ a local language

35. Some media sociologists claim that it is a mistake to assume that television has destroyed family conversation: not only can documentaries, soap operas and other programs spark lively discussion among family members, but watching TV together is an important ritual that brings families into the same domestic space. Such arguments miss the point about _____. Can you really have a proper discussion with your spouse about whether she should leave her job if you are both half-watching TV? While television has potential to stimulate the mind and emotions, it is essentially a passive medium which draws us away from human interaction, whereas conversation is in essence an active form of engagement with others. [3점]

- ① what the ideal family size is
- ② different gender roles in the family
- ③ how parents' attitude affects children
- ④ what a quality family conversation looks like
- ⑤ the generation gap between parents and children

36. The person who relates to certain individuals as family members or friends to the exclusion of others does not affirm that those to whom he relates are better persons. He affirms only that they are his relatives or friends. When a new father tells his two-week-old daughter that she is the “cutest little girl in town,” he is not informing the infant that she would win a beauty contest of girls of her age before a fair panel of judges. He is, more than anything else, telling her that she is his little girl. The same is true in general when people assert that their spouses, their parents, and their sons and daughters are “the best.” The highest praises are used to indicate that certain persons _____. [3점]

- ① will have to be independent early
- ② are to be under extreme pressure
- ③ are the target of others’ criticism
- ④ are the specific objects of affection
- ⑤ have a network of many influential people

As you know, email is a popular, easy way to stay in contact with friends and family. The emails you send to your friends are most likely informal. _____ (A) _____, an email about dinner plans might be only a few lines long and use the same language you would use if you were talking in person. When you are communicating with someone professionally, however, email is more important. In fact, email is often the main mode of communication for scientists—so how you write an email can shape what other scientists think of your character. A well-written email can impress the reader and show that you are thoughtful and responsible, whereas a poorly written email can damage productive relationships or keep you from forming new ones. _____ (B) _____, before sending an email, you must carefully consider your audience and the tone you will use.

Colored flags are used to give important signals to drivers during auto races. ① The green flag means “start” or “continue,” and the yellow flag tells drivers to slow down and hold position. ② The red flag is a signal to stop, and when drivers see the black flag, they know they must pull into the pit area immediately. ③ A blue flag with yellow stripes is used to tell slower drivers to pull over and allow the leaders to pass. ④ Flags are used to represent organizations and groups of people such as the Olympic flag and the flag of the United Nations. ⑤ The two favorite flags of most drivers are: the white flag, which means “one lap to go,” and the checkered flag, which means “you have reached the finish.”

Instead, look for watermelons that are symmetrical, are heavy for their size, and have a creamy yellow spot on the bottom.

When faced with a bunch of watermelons, all promising delicious juiciness inside, how do you know which one to pick? (①) It is suggested that you skip the tapping and instead check the bottom of the watermelon. (②) Tapping a watermelon like a bongo might work for some people, but it’s too subjective. (③) And there’s no agreement on whether a watermelon is supposed to sound “solid” or “tight” or even make a b-flat sound. (④) This is where the watermelon sat on the ground while it soaked up the sun at the farm. (⑤) If this spot is white or greenish, your watermelon may have been picked too soon and might not be as ripe as it should be.

The economists, Alexander Mas and Enrico Moretti could get access to every detail about the productivity of a supermarket chain's cashiers. Using the computerized records from the stores' scanners, they could track every "bleep," every transaction, for 370 cashiers in six stores for two years. They could measure each cashier's productivity by the second, and note how it changed depending on who else was working at the same time.

Mas and Moretti wanted to find out whether people work harder if they are _____. The answer is yes: When a quick worker sits next to you, you immediately start scanning your items more quickly. And you do so because you don't want to be accused of not working hard, rather than because you are inspired by their speed. Mas and Moretti know this because they observed the way that supermarket checkout aisles are arranged: Each worker is looking at a co-worker's back, with his or her own back being watched by a different co-worker. Mas and Moretti found that checkout staff do not speed up when they are looking at fast colleagues. They only speed up when fast colleagues are looking at them.

There was a sign in a store window, which said, "Boy wanted." A boy named Crawford Hill walked into the store, applied for the job, and was hired. Mr. Peters, the store owner, instructed (a) him to go into the attic of the building. "You will find a long, deep box up there," he said. "I want you to sort through the contents and see what should be saved."

(B)

If (b) he didn't report finding the money, how could Mr. Peters trust him with the cash register? By finishing the job in the hot attic and giving the money to his boss rather than pocketing it, Crawford proved that (c) he was both faithful and honest. Years later, when Mr. Peters retired, he turned his business over to Crawford to manage.

(C)

The boy went into the attic and began sorting through the old box of junk. The attic was hot, but Crawford spent hours looking through the box, separating usable nails and screws from things that should be thrown away. When he picked up one of the last items in the box, (d) he noticed a twenty-dollar bill lying on the bottom. He grabbed the bill, raced downstairs, and said, "Look, Mr. Peters! Look what I found in the box — twenty dollars!"

(D)

Then he handed the money to his boss. Mr. Peters smiled because he knew that he could trust the boy to work in his store. The old junk box was merely a test. Mr. Peters had filled it with nails, screws, and other items to test his employee's faithfulness. (e) He wanted to see if the boy would complete the job and keep a good attitude, even though he didn't understand why he was doing seemingly useless work. Mr. Peters had also planted a twenty-dollar bill at the bottom of the box to test his employee's honesty.
