Recently, a friend of mine received a call. The caller told him that he had won a free night's stay at an expensive downtown hotel. All he needed to do was pay the tax. The caller went on to ask him to give a credit card number. So, he told his credit card number to the caller. Later, he found that the hotel had no plan to offer a free night's stay and that thirty dollars had been withdrawn from his account. It's never a good idea to give your credit card number to anyone over the telephone without checking.

24 You are more likely to be disappointed if you _____. Here's a simple example. Your friend, Betty, tells you that a new movie is really amazing. She says it's the best she's ever seen. You go to see the movie. But, if it's not 100% amazing, you'll be disappointed. You'll feel misled. On the other hand, your other friend, Amanda, recommends the same movie like this: she thinks you'll like it, she enjoyed it, at least, it's not bad. In that case, the chances are much greater that you'll really like the new movie. You may go see the movie just to kill time, but you find it really great.

I really agree that locally grown food is environment-friendly and healthy. So, I'd be happy to keep my own garden to grow some food, if only I had the space for one. However, like many people living in downtown areas, I live in an apartment with no outdoor space and very little direct sunlight. I've tried to find a local community garden, but the closest one is miles away from my apartment. I wish the city would build more community gardens and give the citizens like me a place to grow their own food. Fresh vegetables, exercise, lower grocery bills—it all adds up to a healthier city.

38. Kids today can tell you lots of things about preserving the Amazon rain forest. It's great, and I'm glad it's happening. But the problem is that it is just an indirect relationship with nature. Learning about the Amazon is not bad. But it's one thing to read about a frog; it's another to hold it in your hand and feel its life. In the not-so-distant past, kids ruled the country's woods and valleys—running together, building secret forts and treehouses, hunting frogs and fish, playing hide-and-seek behind tall trees. But it's the reverse now. They might learn about nature, but might not experience nature.

(A) Late one winter afternoon, a famous painter set out to visit a town that lay across the river from his own town. He was bringing some important books and papers with him and had a young boy help him carry them. They hurriedly went to the river and got on a ferry.

(B) He replied, "Yes. If you don't walk too fast, you will surely arrive at the town before the gates are closed." Relieved to hear that, the painter and the boy started out. However, when (a) they approached the town, the sun was setting. Afraid of being locked out of the town at night, they walked faster and faster, finally breaking into a run.

(C) All of a sudden, the string around the papers broke. The papers scattered on the ground. It took the two people many minutes to put (b) them together again. By the time the painter and the boy had reached the town gates, it was too late: the gates were shut, and nobody could get in. (c) They had to spend the night outside the town, afraid of robbers and wild beasts.

(D) As the ferry neared the other side of the river, the painter asked the boatman if (d) they would have time to get to the town before its gates were closed. The town was a mile away and night was approaching. The boatman looked at (e) them, and at the bundle of loosely tied papers and books.

Person A In my workplace, I have to deal with a lot of people every day. It isn't easy. I meet a hundred different people a day. I have to be nice even when I don't want to be. Music calms me down, helping me deal with the stress. Some of my co-workers have to do a lot of paperwork, which is terribly boring. Music again is the answer, not loud, just easy-listening, something with an easy rhythm. Good music played in the office inspires the workers and changes the whole atmosphere.

Person B People listen to music to relax, but the work environment isn't the place to relax. In my case, when my favorite songs were played in my office, I found myself singing along to them. I made several mistakes in the paperwork, and it took me a whole afternoon to correct them. Moreover, what if the music isn't the style you enjoy? You will be greatly disturbed by the music. And there are _____ issues. If you can't concentrate due to music, it can lead to serious injuries in some workplaces.
